Andrea Guaran is an associate professor of geography at the Department of Languages and Literatures, Communication, Education and Society of the University of Udine, in possession of the qualification of full professor (obtained in July 2017).

He has taught Geography of Human Spaces and Economic-Political Geography at the courses of Foreign Languages and Literatures and Public Relations, Human Geography at the course of Primary Education Sciences and Geography for the Inter-Linked LM in Historical Studies. Currently he teaches the Fundamentals of Geography and Territory Education at the course of Primary Education Sciences and Geography in the three-year course of Letters.

He is an effective member of the Quality Supervision of the University of Udine, and within it a contact person for the two humanities departments, and president of the Technical Commission for training for the course of Primary Education Sciences.

Over the years he has conducted various research activities in the geographical area, focusing on the following fields of study:

- a) The geography of water resources, focusing mainly on the study of the relationship between tourism development and water resource management and publishing some contributions on the subject. In this specific context, he has participated continuously for more than fifteen years (1996-2014) in the international intensive seminars "European Seminar on the Geography of Water" (Erasmus Intensive Programme on the Geography of water), with some publications;
- b) Aspects of regional geography, especially in relation to the themes of the geography of the population, with a particular focus on immigration issues, the distribution network of settlements and socio-economic dynamics, with the publication of several contributions in volume on several local contexts of the region Friuli Venezia Giulia;
- c) Aspects and problems of urban space, taking part in the research group A.Ge.I. (PRIN funding) on "Disused areas and urban greenery: new landscapes in Italy", publishing some works specifically dedicated to geographic-urban themes, also with a social slant;
- d) Territory, landscape and identity aspects, taking part in the interdepartmental working group that supported the Region in the elaboration of the Landscape Plan of Friuli Venezia Giulia and participating in the national working group of geographers on "Territorial Identities", in particular by focusing on participatory processes (Eugeo Conference, Rome, 2013, National Congress of Italian geographers, Rome, 2016 and International conference in Rome, September 2017). In this context, the two speeches at the annual conference of Uniscape (Galway, June 2016) and the Royal Geographical Society-Institute of British Geographers (Cardiff, August 2018) should also be included.
- e) Geographic themes and their didactic translation, deepening various aspects related to the teaching of geography, in particular paying attention to strategies and tools to promote learning processes, with several publications (articles and books chapters, including two volumes, one in editing).
